ALBERTANUS BRIXENSIS, ROBERTUS GROSSTESTE, PETRARCHUS et alia, Miscellany of Theology, Rhetoric, Diplomacy, Astrology, and Literature
In Latin, decorated manuscript on paper
Italy, probably Florence, c. 1355-1365 (?) and after 1374

155 folios (preceded by [4] blank paper folios and [1] parchment folio, ending with [1] parchment folio and [4] blank paper folios), on paper (with the exception of last numbered folio 155 on parchment) (watermarks close to Briquet, n° 7643–7645: Huchet, Florence, 1357 and 1364, Briquet, no. 8924–8925: Lettre R et croix, Arezzo et Florence, 1358, 1368), mostly in large quires, collation (i24, ii30, iii26, iv24, v26, vi24, viii [last parchment folio]), complete, quire signatures, catchwords, early foliation in upper righthand corner, written in dark brown ink in an abridged Italian semigothic cursive script on up to 30 long lines (justification 140 x 210 mm.), change of hand from ff. 148v-155r ruled in plummet, rubrics in red, paragraph marks in alternating red and blue, numerous 2-line high painted initials in blue or red, with red or purple pen flourishing extending into the margin, some marginal corrections or annotations; mnemonic schematic diagrams of theological and legal notions following text on ff. 118v and 119v (these illustrate Robert Grosseteste, Templum Dei); contemporary table of contents copied on first parchment flyleaf: "[1] De doctrina dicendi et tacendi, [2] Liber consolationis et consilii, etc..."; contemporary or near-contemporary inventory [list of 100 items] copied on last parchment flyleaf: "[beginning illegible]... un pesse, un resto d'ao, un citro...un specchio, una fodra di pele...un corno, una stagnada...una valise, un mortaro...un tanburlo, una arpa...un cimbalo, una trombeta... un galo, una occba...una bombarda...una borsa...un corvo"; drawing of a musical instrument in bottom margin of fol. 155v (lute); on upper pastedown the following annotation in pencil: "Coll[ationné] compl[et] G. Martini / Evodspeed's (?) Bookshop, Boston, 31 ott[obre], 1917." Bound in a later, likely sixteenth-century, limp "hollandaise" vellum binding, smooth spine, title in brown ink on upper spine leather ties still present (lacking one tie on bottom board), traces of early printed material used to reinforce binding found beneath the pastedowns (watermark of blank flyleaves close to Briquet nos. 900-901: no match, but paper is clearly second half of 16th century), binding and contents in very sound condition. Dimensions 292 x 217 mm.

This interesting miscellany includes an unusual compilation mostly of rhetorical (school ?) texts, certainly made in Italy and datable to the mid-fourteenth century. The core of the manuscript includes a collection of most of Albert of Brescia's works, including his sermons which are much rarer than his rhetorical writings. These are combined with other secular (Petrarch), religious, and scientific (Ptolomy and Thabit ibn'Qurra) works for an unknown use, perhaps in a monastic school setting. Some of the texts are unedited, and a few remain unidentified.

PROVENANCE

Watermarks, script, certain passages and notes in Italian all point to an Italian origin c. 1355-1365. The last date quoted in the manuscript seems to be 1311. However, the manuscript could have received added elements after 1374, since Petrarch's translation of Griseldis is dated 1374 (note the change of script and added parchment folio). The exchange of letters included on ff. 138v-140v could contain more precise elements concerning for whom this manuscript was made or where it was compiled.

2. Private Collection, Europe.

Literature: Bowsky, W.M. Henry VII in Italy, 1960. Entering the peninsula in 1310, Henry proclaimed himself above all parties and received the homage of leaders of both of the chief factions; in Jan., 1311, he was crowned king of the Lombards at Milan, a Guelph city. A revolt occurred in Milan, however, when Henry levied taxes on the city to support his army; although the revolt was suppressed, it drove Henry into the Ghibelline camp and precipitated war with the Guelph cities. Henry did not reach Rome until the following year, where on June 29, 1312, he was crowned Holy Roman emperor. Leaving Rome, he besieged Florence, but without success; in 1313, having allied himself with King Frederick II of Sicily, he pronounced the ban of the empire against King Robert of Naples, who opposed Henry's policy in Italy. While preparing to attack Robert, Henry died of fever. Henry VII's abortive Italian campaign only served to prove the futility of any attempt to revive the ancient imperial policy at a time when the papacy and S Italy were controlled by France and the N Italian towns were autonomous. Henry was succeeded by Holy Roman Emperor Louis IV.

ff. 138v-140v, Unidentified letters; rubric, Noveritis quod quondam invenis satis...; incipit, "Reverendo patri suo et domino..."; rubric, Exordium; incipit, "Exime nobilitatis etc.

Cum ex dispositione capitis..."; rubric, Epistula misa ad maiorem; incipit, "Religioso viro fratri L. domini N. hostiensis episcopi..."

ff. 141-143, Tholomaeus (Claudius Ptolomeus ?), Liber de proprietatibus signorum [On the properties of astrological signs]; rubric, Liber de proprietatibus signorum secundum Tholomeum de figura configuro arietis; incipit, "Vera figura arietis est sine lingua..."; explicit "...et de mastice est bona. Deo gratias amen."

Literature: Lexikon des Mittelalters, VII, col. 312.

f. 143v, blank;

ff. 144-148, Thabit ibn'Qurra (826–901), Liber de quinque imaginibus [Latin translation by Gherard of Cremona ?]; rubric, Incipit liber Thebit Be[n]chorat de quinque ymaginibus et sunt generales; incipit, "Dixit Aburabem Beniclis [?] quia omnes orientales operabantur et non curarant de aliis..."; explicit, "Explicit liber Thebit Benchorat de ymaginibus. Deo gratias matrique sue amen."

ff. 148v-154v, Petrarch, Latin translation of Boccacio's Griseldis [Johannes de Certaldo, quoted on folio 149]; see index on first parchment folio : "De eiusdem/cuiusdem uxoris Patientia & Constantia"; lacks rubric; incipit, "[L]ibrum tuum quem nostro materno..."; "Est ad Ytalicum latus occidentus vesalus ex apenini..."; explicit, "...hec muliercula passa est."

Literature: Morabito, R., "La diffusione della storia di Griselda dal XIV au XX secolo", in Studi sul Boccaccio, 17 (1988), pp. 237-285; Petrarca, Francesco [Bufano, A. (ed)], Opere latine, a cura di Antonietta Bufano, Turin, II; Last story of Boccacio's Decameron [Boccacio, Decameron, a cura di V. Branca, Turin 1980], Griseldis was translated into Latin by Petrarch in one of his letters to the same Boccacio (De oboedentia et fide uxoris, in Seniles, XVIII, 3) in 1374.

ff. 155-155v, Petrarch, Epistola; incipit, "[A]rsitus amor tui ut scribentem senex..."; explicit, "Explicit epistula domini Petrarce deo gratias amen";
