Austria?, c. 1300-1330

i (modern paper) + 30 +i (modern paper) folios on parchment, modern foliation in pencil, bottom outer corner recto, missing the first two quires, single leaves after ff. 1 and 10, leaves in the last quire, and an unknown number of quires at the end (collation, *i*³ [original structure uncertain, missing a leaf between 1 and 2] *ii*⁴, *iii*⁶ [-4, following f. 10, with loss of text]) iv- *v*⁸ *vi*² [original structure uncertain, possibly originally a quire of 8, missing 1-2 and 5-8]), horizontal catchwords, inside lower margins, quires signed in roman numerals, middle, lower margin, the first quire signed "III," ruled in ink, with the first, third, penultimate, bottom, and on some folios the middle two horizontal rules full across, and with single full-length vertical bounding lines, prickings in outer and top margins (justification 140 x 92 mm.), written in dark brown ink, in a mature gothic bookhand in forty-one to forty-two long lines, red paragraph marks and rubrics in red, five- to three-line alternately red and blue initials throughout, two larger initials, seven-line parti-colored in red and blue (ff. 5v and 6v), in good condition, f. 2, bottom corner stained with some loss of text, throughout, with some internal staining or thumbing. Bound in pink-dyed pigskin over wooden boards, back sewn on three raised thongs (rebacked), boards tooled in blind in a saltire motif, in outer border a set of fleur-de-lis stamps, rosettes and deployed eagle stamps in central compartments, brass clasps and catches, binding restored with boards largely remounted, entirely rebacked, pastedowns and endleaves renewed. Dimensions 180 x 120 mm.

A treasure trove of material for future research, the sixty sermons were probably never printed and are unstudied. Only one sermon by a named author has been identified, and only fourteen have been found in other manuscripts. Direct and uncomplicated, some emphasize the moral example and lives of the saints, others focus on the duties of priests, the sacraments, and the Lord's Prayer. Each sermon begins with a theme from the Bible, sometimes explaining the content of scriptural texts directly and often citing texts from the Bible as authoritative proof.

PROVENANCE

1. Determination of the origin of manuscript is rendered somewhat difficult by the fragmentary nature of this codex. An Austrian origin and a date in the opening decades of the fourteenth century is suggested by the script and decoration, as well as the choice of sermons, represented in other collections all clearly of Austrian origin, in particular Cod. Zwettl 312 (see C. Ziegler, Zwettl, 1996-1997, pp. 26-29; see also the similar collection, Zwettl, Cod. 396, III (see Ziegler, 1996-1997, pp. 310-311). The Cistercian Abbey of Zwettl is located in Lower Austria, in the diocese of St-Pölten, eighty miles northwest of Vienna; it was founded in 1138 by Count Hadmar I of Kuenring, with Herrmann, a monk from Heiligenkreuz, as its first abbot (1137-47). The foundation was confirmed by Innocent II (1140), and grew rapidly, soon becoming one of the most important monasteries in the order.

The relationship with the Zwettl manuscript, as well as the order of the sermons included in the first section of the manuscript (discussed below, text) are suggestive of a Cistercian origin, and the question of whether this particular manuscript was copied in a Cistercian monastery certainly deserves to be explored in greater depth. Two of the saints included support an origin in Austria; Oswald, a seventh century king from Northumbria, was widely venerated in Southern Germany and Austria (F 5 August), and Aegidius, a very popular saint throughout Europe, was the patron of Styria in Austria (F 1 September)

3. Early inscription in upper margin, fol. 6: "Noli timere quia in nostro adventu pax vobiscum...", simply copying the line in justified text placed below.

Included in this manuscript are sixty sermons (the manuscript begins with the third quire and is missing an unknown number of quires at the end, as well as a few leaves internally, so five of these sermons now begin or end imperfectly). The text of forty-seven of these sermons (listed above by their opening words) has been examined for this description. The author of only one sermon has been identified by name; the sermon on ff. 16-17v, is by Sigibottus or Siboto, a Dominican Preacher from Vienna, whose sermons probably date from the end of the thirteenth century. Many of the sermons in this manuscript are quite brief, consisting of little more than outlines. It is therefore noteworthy that this sermon, which the scribe calls a “sermo bonus” in the rubric, is one of the longest in the collection. Three other sermons have been identified in additional manuscripts listed in Schneyer’s Repertorium (listed below); all three are anonymous. Ten of the sermons in this manuscript are also found in Cod. Zwettl 312, also dating from the fourteenth century (see Provenance above). The manuscript deserves to be carefully compared with the Zwettl manuscript as well as with other Austrian collections of sermons, including Cod. Zwettl 396, which includes two sermons also found in Zwettl 312 and the manuscript described here.

These sermons included appear to be from two sources, since the sermon on f. 20 begins “Incipit aliud opus sermonum” (i.e, Here begins another sermon collection). The sermons on the first twenty folios are arranged in an idiosyncratic order, beginning with sermons for the feast of St. Oswald (5 August), continuing with the Assumption (15 August), and other feasts from the summer and autumn, continuing with St. Nicholas (6 December) and concluding with the Apostle Thomas (21 December), and then continuing with sermons from the Common of Saints. The liturgical year in the later Middle Ages began in Advent, and it was common for sermon collections to reflect this and begin collections for the Sanctorale with the feast of Andrew on November 30. This collection clearly never began with Andrew; instead, the saints that remain suggest it probably once began after Christmas, perhaps with Stephen on December 26, a practice often found in Cistercian manuscripts. This possible link with Cistercian practice is especially interesting given the relationship between this manuscript and Cod. Zwettl 312.

Medieval sermons, especially learned sermons preached in University contexts, can be difficult for modern readers to follow, and can seem far removed from actual religious practice. These sermons, in contrast, are quite readable and would repay careful study. It is easy to imagine a preacher using them as the basis for actual sermons. Sermons for the feasts days of saints include details from their lives; the sermon for St. Catherine on f. 10v, for example, begin with an account of her youth; the sermon for St. Bartholomew mentions his mission to India (f. 3). The sermon for St. Oswald on f. 2, a seventh-century king of Northumbria, begins with a blunt statement that kings and princes are rarely saints. Pastoral concerns dominate; the sermon on f. 22v, is said to be suitable for the hall of a prelate with the care of souls; there are sermons discussing the Sacraments, a discussion of the dignity of priests (f. 15v), as well as practical sermons on praying for the dead (ff. 7v and 25), helping souls in purgatory (ff. 8-9), and a commentary on the Lord’s Prayer (f. 19v).

The sixty sermons included here represent a treasure-trove of material for future research. Only one sermon by a named author has been identified, and only fourteen have been found in other manuscripts. It is likely that all of these sermons, the majority of which are short, abbreviated texts, but which also include lengthier sermons, have never been printed or studied by modern scholars. Their content is of particular interest, since they are direct and uncomplicated; some emphasize the moral example and lives of the saints, others focus on the duties of priests, the sacraments and the Lord's Prayer. Each begins with a theme from the Bible, and their content is linked to this theme in a straightforward fashion. Some explain the content of scriptural texts directly; texts from the Bible are also cited throughout as authoritative proof.
